PREFACE

This handbook is an outgrowth of a desire to make the library resources of Chicago better known both to the members of the Chicago Library Club and to the public, and to commemorate in a modest way the twenty-fifth anniversary of the club's existence. The list of libraries is not complete although considerable effort has been expended to make it so. The data in regard to each institution is simply an indication of its resources. It is hoped that the index of subjects will make this information more valuable.

The committee is indebted to Miss Ahern for a short sketch of the history and development of the club. In 1905 the club issued a very useful volume, "Libraries of the City of Chicago with an Historical Sketch of the Chicago Library Club," which gives a more chronological and constitutional history.

A RESUME OF THE CLUB'S CAREER

The recorded history of the Chicago Library Club tells of several motives in the minds of those whose activity brought about the organization. There were at that time, it is said, a number of library workers in Chicago, who had previously been members of the New York Library Club. Further, it was foreseen that the occasion of the World's Columbian Exposition would bring to Chicago those interested in library development, in such numbers and under such circumstances as would seem to call for an impersonal host for the occasions which would arise.

However it was, the club was organized in December, 1891, in common with many similar groups of Chicago people, determined to make the visitors to the World's Fair understand Chicago and its interests.

The occasion of the World's Fair in Chicago marked a new era for many lines of endeavor. Among these was library service and extension. Not only in Chicago, but throughout the entire Middle West, if, indeed, one may not say the whole country, library work as a public service took on new energy, character, enlightenment and many far-reaching results that had not marked its existence before.

It must always be a matter of pride to the Chicago Library Club that its first president was Dr. William Frederick Poole. His election bespoke activity and farsightedness and at the same time assured genial companionship and inspiration.

The personnel of the Chicago Library Club changed rapidly with the activities of the time. Death removed Dr. Poole, change of position took Mr. Nelson, Miss Clarke, Mr. Pickett, Dr. Wire and other moving spirits out of its circle; but it brought in the late lamented Katharine L. Sharp and Anderson H. Hopkins, C. W. Andrews, William Warner Bishop, while the interest of C. B. Roden, William Stetson Merrill, Irene Warren, C. R. Perry and others still remained a helpful influence in the club. In later years the club has rejoiced in the membership of the well-beloved Henry E. Legler, W. N. C. Carlton, Geo. B. Utley, all prominent in the national councils of librarians.

The interest of the club, far from being a concentrated professional thing, reached out into the affairs of the city and of the state, with which library interests were of right, concerned. Through the initial activity and continued interest of the Chicago Library Club, jail libraries for Cook County were first started, from which grew not only the development of the socialized attitude of the Cook County and Bridewell jailers, but which, because of the interest of Mr. Whitman, has since reached out into other correctional work in penal institutions.

The home libraries were the seed from which afterwards grew institutional and deposit libraries throughout the city.

When the library interests seemed to lack in treatment the vision and appreciation which they had a right to expect from the municipal authorities, a committee of the Chicago Library Club called upon the then mayor of Chicago and presented to him those things which they considered defects in the manner and cause of appointments to the library board and it may be safely claimed that a new library day in Chicago, in a very large measure, began through the influence of that movement. The Chicago Library Club at this time also asked the mayor to appoint a committee of citizens to consider the relations between the libraries, museums and art galleries of the city and out of that grew a form of coöperation which, while it has not yet attained the growth and power that could be desired, is still a work that redounds to the credit of its founders.

The publications of the club have been few, the magnum opus being the List of Serials in the public libraries of Chicago and vicinity. This work was afterward taken over by the John Crerar Library, but it had its origin in the spirit of the Chicago Library Club.

In the early days the discussions before the club were largely on library work. It was possible then to have persons of national reputation address the club on matters that were closely related to the work of its members. William H. Brett of Cleveland, Mrs. S. C. Fairchild, Dr. James H. Canfield, Melvil Dewey, Arthur E. Bostwick, Dr. Herbert Putnam, among the librarians, and Professor James Westfall Thompson, Jane Addams, Professor Charles Zueblin, Dr. Myra Reynolds, Rev. F. W. Gunsaulus, Colonel F. W. Parker, Mrs. Ellen H. Richards and others outside the library office related library service to their fields of activity.

The annual party, which has grown in size and diversions, if not in effect, was instituted in January, 1899, and its effort, more or less successful, at being hostess to the A. L. A. and at times, to its council, are well known.

It must not fail to be recorded that the transfer of the A. L. A. headquarters from Boston to Chicago was initiated by members of the Chicago Library Club and that the generous aid which made possible the first fitting up of headquarters came through the influence and activity of the Chicago Library Club membership.

There is a temptation to dwell upon the fields that were not occupied, the endeavors that were not made and the opportunities that were not used, in looking over the history of the Chicago Library Club, the temptation fails when memory also recalls to those of long time membership, the gratifying and valuable development in professional spirit, in the clear-sightedness of the majority of the members and the appreciation of the value of professional association which is manifest among the members today, after twenty-eight years of existence.

The service of the club has been helpfully extended, through the membership, to the betterment of library service for Illinois and when the history of the development of libraries in the state is recorded, the names of members of the Chicago Library Club will, of right, be writ in its annals.

There has been a fine spirit of comaraderie, a remarkable absence of personal aggrandizement or ambition and a willingness to do team work, that can be traced throughout the history of the club. The success of one has been the success of all and the misfortune of one has brought forth the sympathy of all.

MARY EILEEN AHERN.
